CURTIN WORKS MAN DIED TO SAVE FRIEND

Hunter Dukeman Killed on Railroad Nearby Clearfield.

HIS PAL BADLY HURT

Hunter Dukeman, of Clearfield, a brakeman on the N. Y. C. railroad, and a brother of Chief of Police Dukeman, of Bellefonte, was killed almost instantly last Thursday. The story of the accident told by fellow members of the train crew is that he courageously sacrificed his life in an heroic effort to save that of Clarence McFarland, a personal friend and fellow-employe. Accidents on the railroad are of almost daily occurrence. Not infrequently a railroader is killed in the performance of duty, and every now and then one gives up his life to save another.

Thus originated the old, old saying that the railroader leaves home in the morning not knowing whether he will live to return to his family. The untimely death of Hunter Dukeman, who was a former Curtin Works boy, aptly illustrates this.

Dukeman was working with McFarland, another brakeman, at a place where the train had been cut. Dukeman had been given the signal to back the engine when he noticed McFarland had tripped and fallen on the track. Leaping into the fast narrowing breach between the cars, the courageous man attempted to save his companion's life. He was caught between the cars and crushed so badly that he died almost immediately in the train that was rushing him to the Clearfield Hospital. McFarland was also seriously injured and is now a patient in the Clearfield Hospital.

Deceased was born at Curtin, 39 years ago and was a son of Mr. and Mrs. Miles Dukeman, and was unmarried, making his home with his brother, Harrison, at Clearfield. In addition to his parents, the following brothers and sisters survive: Harry, Mrs. Howard Martin and Mrs. Edward Kline, Bellefonte; Harrison, Clearfield; Mrs. James Osman, Sunbury; Mrs. William Billett, Coleville, and William, Altoona. Funeral services were held on Sunday afternoon from the Methodist church at Curtin. Interment at Curtin.

Large Election Ballot.

The ballot that will be handed to voters when they go to the polls on Nov. 4, will be one of the largest ever used in Pennsylvania. Present calculations are that it will be about 25x30 inches. This unusually large sheet becomes necessary owing to the fact that this is a presidential year and with nine different parties appearing on the ballot. Each party is entitled to a separate column bearing the names of 38 presidential electors. In addition to a President and Vice President, provision is made on the ballot for candidates for Auditor Geneart and State Treasurer, also for Congress and Legislature. Two proposed amendments to the constitution also appear on the ballot.

Prisoners Removed.

Two of the ring-leaders in the recent riot to blow up the Western penitentiary, at Pittsburgh, and which resulted in the killing of two guards, were taken to Philadelphia on Tuesday. They were on the eastbound Lehigh express and were heavily shackled and accompanied by 5 guards. It was said one of them was the famous "Stock Yards Gunman."

ELKS BIG CARNIVAL FRIDAY, OCTOBER 31

DANCING AT ARMORY

Bellefonte's "Mardi-Gras," in other words, the Elks All Hallowe'en parade, harvest queen contest and charity ball, promises to be bigger and better than ever this year. At a meeting of the various committees on Tuesday evening, chairmen were appointed as follows: W. T. Kelly, general committee; G. W. Rees, harvest queen committee; W. H. Brown, parade committee; John J. Bower, decorations; O. A. Kline, charity ball; Homer P. Barnes, fireworks committee; Charles Schlow, prize solicitation committee; B. J. Beezer, publicity committee. All matters having to do with any of the above committees should bea tken up directly with the chairmen.

The money derived from the various branches of the celebration will be expended toward the salary and expenses of a community nurse. The harvest queen contest, in which the names of Esther Hines and Emma Gehret, of Bellefonte, and Margaret Goddard, of State College, have already been entered, will close on Wednesday evening at 10 o'clock. Prizes in this contest will be a diamond ring for first prize and a pearl necklace for second.

The parade committee has laid down the following rules: All military, fraternal and civic organizations, as well as business places, which anticipate entering floats in the parade, will report to William H. Brown, not later than Oct. 24. All masked persons must march in the mummers division.

The prize committee is working hard to obtain a more alluring list of prizes than ever before. The list was not completed in time to be published this week, but announcement of the float prizes has been made as follows: The best float in line, a cash prize of $25; second, $15. The best fancy costume in line, $15; second, $10.

In connection with the parade, Burgess W. Harrison Walker has issued a proclamation to the effect that there will be no traffic or parking on the following streets between the hours of 6 and 10 P. M. on Friday, Oct. 31:

Bishop St. from Ridge to Spring; Spring St. from High to Howard; Howard St. from Spring to Allegheny; Allegheny St. from Linn to Logan; High St. from Diamond to P. R. R. Co. crossing.

Immediately after the parade the charity ball will be held in the armory. A small admission fee of 50c will be charged. Everybody is guaranteed a good time. Music will be furnished by the Penn Centre Eight, who acquitted themselves so well at the Defense Day ball.

Proclamation Issued.

From the office of the Chief Burgess comes a proclamation this week which has to do with soaping windows and other depredations practiced by children both small and large, during the Hallowe'en period. The Burgess is determined to stop this practice and police officers have strict orders to apprehend any person caught soaping windows or in any way defacing or destroying property. Parking regulations will be found incorporated in the article on the Hallow-een celebration.

Gives Local Hospital $5000 in Memory of Her Son

In memory of her son, and in appreciation of the care and attention given him when he was critically ill from pneumonia at the Bellefonte hospital, Mrs. Mary E. Winton, who died a few weeks ago at her home at Scranton, included in her will a bequest of $5,000 for the Bellefonte Hospital, now known as the Centre County Hospital. The first news of this unexpected and liberal bequest will likely come to the newly elected officers and trustees of the hospital through this publication in "The Republican." The young man in whose memory the bequest has been made was Walter W. Winton. His father, who was a wealthy dismond merchant, died at Scranton some years ago. His widow, upon her death recently, left a large estate. In her will she made bequests amounting to about $20,000 to various charitable and religious institutions, in addition to the $5,000 given to the Centre County Hospital. Coming at a time when a new wing is to be added to the hospital, and other improvements installed, Mrs. Winton's handsome gift will be doubly appreciated.

It was while young Winton was a student at the Bellefonte Academy, four or five years ago, that he became ill from pneumonia and was removed to the local hospital. Dr. Melvin J. Locke presumably was an attending physician, for the boy's mother, by way of showing her appreciation, designated that the $5,000 be given to the "Dr. Locke hospital at Bellefonte." Young Winton's plans for completing his education were sadly shattered. His father's death necessitated his return from Bellefonte Academy to Scranton. The school term here was about closing when he came back to Bellefonte. With several young friends he attended an Academy dance. During the night he drove his friends to Altoona in a high-powered car. It was while he was returning from Altoona that he lost control of his car nearby State College. The machine turned over and young Winton was killed. His mother was heart-broken as a result of his timely death. Illustrating her devotion to him was the $5,000 bequest to the local hospital, also bequests of $100 to each of eight young men who were his intimate friends.

The Republican's Reply to Criticisms of Our Exposure of Conditions at Rockview

Because "The Republican" has given publicity to deplorable conditions at Rockview prison, which is an institution supported by the money of every taxpayer, two local newspapers, the "Centre Democrat" and the "Keystone Gazette," last week undertook to defend the prison management of J. O. Stutzman, the superintendent, and everything in and about the prison grounds.

Ever since this newspaper published its first article outlining conditions at Rockview, several persons in town, including James H. Potter, of the Potter—Hoy Hardware Co., have been desirous that somebody should defend Mr. Stutzman and his methods of prison management. We welcome the action of the "Centre Democrat" and the "Keystone Gazette" in the course they have taken, for we have from the first believed that publicity alone will reveal the facts and remedy existing evils.

We do not know Superintendent Stu zman. We have never seen him so far as we can recall. From what we learn, the defenders of his system of prison management are right when they emphasize the statement that he is a Christian gentleman. We have never said that he is not, quite naturally assuming him to be such. We have never criticised him personally, and we have no such criticism to offer now.

We are not, and have not been, discussing his qualifications as a man. What we are giving publicity to, have been, and will continue so to do, are conditions at Rockview prison under the Stutzman management. What we have charged, what we now reiterate, and what the "Centre Democrat" and the "Keystone Gazette" are challenged to deny, is:—

That as a result of the Stutzman system of self rule among the convicts they had taken matters into their own hands to such an extent that wholesale uprisings were imminent and the State police had to be summoned to assume control.

That this crisis had become so acute that wholesale escapes of convicts were feared.

That Major Lynn Adams, of Harrisburg, superintendent in charge of the State police, found conditions so appalling when he arrived at Rockview that he declined an invitation to take dinner with Mr. Stutzman, stating that in his judgment it was a time for action, not eating.

That in the very midst of the chaotic conditions prevailing at the prison, when seven or eight convicts escaped in a single day and the State police were called in, Mr. Stutzman departed for Salt Lake City, Utah, to attend a convention of prison managers, and remained away for a week or more.

That when State police searched convicts at Rockview they found not only wire clippers, and other tools, but heroin, the most dangerous dope known, secreted in the seams of prisoners' trousers.

That intoxicating liquor was found on convicts, and that a short time before the State police were summoned twenty or more prisoners landed in the hospital as the result of a drunken riot among themselves.

That Rockview guards had been so curtailed in their authority to enforce orders as to encourage convicts to not only openly insult them but to jeeringly refuse to work.

That Mr. Stutzman, while appearing on the surface as co-operating with Deputy Warden Fred Healy, wanted the Board of Prison Inspectors, at Pittsburgh, to discharge Healy.

That, on the ground of incompetence and inefficiency, John M. Egan, some time before resigning as Warden of the Pittsburgh penitentiary, of which Rockview is a part, recommended that the Board of Prison Inspectors dismiss Mr. Stutzman.

The foregoing indictments, we submit, certainly are not criticisms of Mr. Stutzman, personally, but of the Stutzman plan of prison management.

If the Stutzman plan is the best plan for Rockview, why did it become necessary for State police to be called in to assume charge? Four or five State police are still on duty there. Why?

Mr. Stutzman took charge at Rockview in 1923. In 1922 the Court House records show that four convicts escaped. In 1923, the records show, twelve convicts escaped. Thus far in 1924, according to the records, twenty-three convicts have escaped. Of the latter number, eight are still at liberty. In other words the records show that the number of escapes thus far in 1924, under the Stutzman system, is nearly six times greater than in 1922 when rigid discipline prevailed at Rockview.

This newspaper published, and invites contradiction if untrue, the statement that one of the first things the State police did upon taking charge of discipline at Rockview, was to order the convicts out to work in the harvest fields. This order met with some resistance, but it was enforced, nevertheless. If the convicts had been doing a reasonable amount of work each day prior to that time, why was such an order necessary? The fact is that many of them had reached the point of insolent rebellion where they worked only when they pleased, and as they pleased, and the result was that taking care of the harvest had been woefully delayed. We have charged that the yield from the prison farms is far below what it should be, that the whole system, in fact, has been operated at a financial loss to the State. That has not been officially denied. Neither has it been denied that the prison farms used to be considered as among the very best in the State.

"The Republican" has stated that vegetables sold by the prison to Bellefonte dealers were bought back again for use, either at the prison or at Mr. Stutzman's residence, and paid for by the State. We have yet to see any official denial of that statement.

The "Centre Democrat," in its defense of the Stutzman management, enumerated yields of various vegetables, including "Cabbage . . . in large quantities," also that the new $150,000 cannery had prepared, among other things, "1000 gallons of sauerkraut." We wish to ask Mr. Stutzman, either direct, or through the "Centre Democrat" and the "Keystone Gazette," this specific question: Has not cabbage been purchased in the last few days for use at the prison? We would also ask: Is the quantity of sauerkraut on hand for the 600 or more convicts 1000 gallons, or actually four or five barrels, as we are informed?

Mr. Stutzman has informed his newspaper defenders that the new cannery cost the State $150,000. Disinterested observers familiar with such costs inform us that the bill will be nearer $250,000 than $150,000. Just how efficiently the new cannery is being operated is a matter regarding which there may be some difference of opinion. We are informed that only recently a large number of cans of tomatoes, which had spoiled, were hastily dumped into a ditch and immediately covered with earth. If that is not true we will welcome a correction. Eye witnesses to the incident say that it is true.

The same defenders of Mr. Stutzman, presumably having secured the figures from him, say that the prison farms this year are yielding 9,500 bushels of potatoes. We hope this proves to be true. Others inform us that, based on tests, it will be fortunate if the yield reaches 5,000 bushels.

The "Centre Democrat" in defending and excusing everything at Rockview, including escapes, rioting, possession of drugs and liquor on convicts, quotes Mr. Stutzman as saying:

"God never intended that man wear stripes like a zebra, and I would not try to alter God's plan."

We rather prefer to believe that Mr. Stutzman did not say that. If he did, he by inference, would lead one to suppose that before the days of the Stutzman management at Rockview the prisoners there wore stripes. That, as Mr. Stutzman knows, or should know, is not true. Convicts at Rockview have never, from the day the institution was established down to the present time, been required to wear stripes. As we have said, we prefer to believe that the reporter did not fully understand what Mr. Stutzman did say.

It is a matter of common report that one day a convict who was conscious of violating some prison rule, and who happened to observe Mr. Stutzman approaching, thought he would cleverly head off criticism by hurriedly apologizing. Mr. Stutzman is said to have replied that he wanted the convict to know that the only rule at Rockview was the Golden Rule.

And the State police are still at Rockview. Why?

RHOADS NEW DEPUTY

Bellefonte Man Appointed as Assistant Warden at Rockview.

Clarence Rhoads, of Bellefonte, popularly known to his many friends as "Griz," was rewarded for efficient service when he was this week appointed Deputy Warden at Rockview. He succeeds Elmer Davis, who figured recently in a shooting affray nearby Lewistown.

Rhoads has been a guard at Rockview for some time past. He has developed considerable ability in prison work and is regarded as well qualified for the increased responsibilities which go with his new and more remunerative position.

CENTRE COUNTY MAY HAVE CEMENT PLANT

OPTION ON 185 ACRES

Centre County may be the centre of a new industry in the near future, if plans of Lemont and State College business men mature as they are expected to do. Ten men of the above named communities have subscribed $500, each, for experimental work on what they hope will be a large cement plant in the near future.

Options on 185 acres of land have been secured just outside of the town of Lemont and experimental drilling and laboratory tests have developed the fact that a large deposit of raw material suitable for the manufacture of cement is there.

A corporation will be formed and the sponsors of the enterprise will endeavor to finance it by the sale of bonds to the amount of $1,000,000. The men who have already put their money into it are confident that the issue of bonds will be disposed of readily.

The value of such an industry to the county is immeasurable and it is their hope that it will not be nipped in the bud for lack of support.

PRISONER SUFFOCATED

Frederick Beam, aged 20 years of Woodland, was suffocated, and a companion, Walter Ralston, aged 18 years, of Kylertown, was badly burned as a result of a fire in the Philipsburg town hall early Monday morning. The two young men were prisoners in the borough lock-up, which is located in the basement of the town hall. The building was without a watchman at the time of the fire. The two young men were in securely locked cells. Ralston saved his life by wrapping his head in a blanket.

Presumably the fire originated in the boiler room of the building, which adjoins the lock up. The two young men had been arrested Saturday night for being intoxicated. No hearings being held on Sunday, they were detained until Monday. Their cries as smoke appeared, were heard by persons in the street, but were regarded as the hilarity of drunken prisoners. Finally nearby residents discovered smoke coming from the building. They gave the alarm, keys were secured and the cel-room door unlocked. Beam's lifeless body was removed first. The smoke was so dense that it was necessary to smash the lock on Ralston's cell before he could be taken out. He is unconscious, but will likely recover.

Student's Leg Broken.

All manner of startling rumors regarding casualties attending last Friday night's student clash at State College have been current here during the last few days. A report which gained wide circulation was to the effect that one student had died from a broken back, that another had an eye gouged out, and several others had suffered broken legs, arms and ribs. The most thorough inquiry we were able to make revealed that a student had a leg fractured, and several others sustained minor injuries. The clash marked the customary hazing of Freshmen, who number about 1000. To guard against any of the large number being overlooked, each Freshman as he was hazed was required to dip his right hand in a solution that was expected to leave a conspicuous stain. The Sophomores reasoned that any Freshman who appeared on the following day without a discolored right hand could be identified as overlooked and accordingly subject to prompt hazing. In this the Sophomores met with disappointment. Many of the Freshmen succeeded in removing the stains from their hands by means of soap and scrubbing brushes, and the Sophomores were unable to pick out the few who had previously escaped.

Ford Hits Culvert.

An overdose of moonshine is alleged to have been the cause of a Ford roadster smashing into a concrete culvert on the Centre Hall mountain, nearby the watering trough, last Saturday evening about 8:30. Persons who witnessed the crash alleged that there was a quantity of liquor in the car as well as in the driver. A Buick roadster picked the slightly injured driver up shortly after the accident and took him back over the mountain. The Ford was left by the roadside.

LATEST IN KNITTED MODES; VARIETY OF STYLES IN HATS

WE ARE so apt to take for granted the good things of life, to accept them as a matter of course. In regard to present-day apparel, for instance, through the knitted arts, what a wealth of handsome, no less practical raiment is being lavished on the world of fashion these days.

No item written in the book of exquisite costuming is omitted in the realm of things knitted. Even the delicately wrought, gorgeously colored and deeply fringed Spanish shawl is expressed through the intricacies of knitted stitch.

Just now interest centers about beautiful knitted tapestry and brocade effects, also complicated plaids, checks and stripes which once were thought possible to produce only by weaving on the loom. Jacquard patternings are attracting special style interest such as is exploited in the exquisite knitted suit here pictured. Cheery colorings are decreed for both street and sports apparel this season. This striking jacquard pattern is developed in peach color against a white background. As an exponent of perfected knitted art, this altogether lovely suit ranks with the highest.

A chic note is introduced throughout knitted styling in that solid colored plain stitch garments are embellished with elaborate jacquard trims, wide borders being especially favored. Often the design contrasts; silk or fiber against a woolen background always maintaining color blendings as chief interest. Indeed fanciful knitted trimmings are the order of the day. Very interesting are the remarkable simulations of fur, done in yarns and zephyrs.

Toward the close of the reign of the little cloche hat it seemed that millions of women had but a single thought, and that was to get a small, close-fitting bit of headwear like that worn by everybody else. This fall these millions of women have but a single thought and that's to get a hat a little different from every one else's. There seems to be nothing to stand in the way of their success, for millinery this fall presents a wider scope in styles and greater variety in their interpretations than we have had for many a year.

Velvet is the most important medium for winter hats and the group leads off with two hats covered with it. The hat at the left is very simply trimmed with a big cabochon of satin-covered cord. Next to it a hat with a rich feather fancy, made of ostrich flues, reiterates the harmony of velvet and ostrich. Below, at the left, a suggestion of the poke bonnet appears in a wide-brimmed hat of black hatters' plush, with round crown. A collar of metallic brocade ribbon and an airy feather pom-pon adorn it. Next to it a very popular shape is shown covered with velvet. The height of the square crown is apparently lessened by a band of georgette above one of velvet which makes a background for a collar of embroidered medallions. A rosette and sash of georgette are posed at the left side. The group is finished with a picturesque and lovely model made of corded silk and trimmed at the front with a huge rosette of rich satin ribbon having a fancy edge. None of these hats leave anything to be desired in the fine art of millinery. Black and dark brown continue the favorite colors for hats made of hatters' plush. Velvet has an extensive color range, including black and many shades of brown, with purple, orchid, fuchsia, light and dark green, strong and soft blues, the fur and pheasant colors and tones similar to henna.

Woman Tells of Life on Volcano

New York.—When Prof. T. A. Jaggar, Jr., director of the Hawaiian Volcanic Research association, and his wife left the islands not long ago for a visit to relatives in this city, they had an anxiety for the little home they established in 1912 in the very rim of the crater of the volcano of Kilauea. For more than 100 years the volcano had had no serious eruption.

Today, with Kilauea in active eruption, with loss of life, Mr. and Mrs. Jaggar are speeding homeward, anxious to learn if their home is still standing. They left New York a few days ago when the first news of the dangerous activity of the volcano was received.

Professor Jaggar, a Boston scientist, went to Hawaii 12 years ago to establish the volcano observatory on top of Mount Kilauea, which is located about 35 miles from Hilo. At its top, about seven miles in circumference, is the gray dust-covered rim of the crater. Here, on the ragged edge of the cliff, the Jaggars built for themselves a bungalow.

They did not fear Kilauea.

The great danger to which they considered themselves exposed lay in the huge active volcano of Mauna Loa, some twenty-five miles away.

Describes Life There.

In describing their life in the crater home, during her visit here, Mrs. Jaggar said:

"Our housekeeping is quite simple—in some respects, in fact, almost primitive in its simplicity. The four small rooms of our cabin, plainly furnished, require no great amount of time to care for.

"As regular servants are out of the question, owing to lack of accommodation, we met this difficulty, as many similarly situated housewives of New York apartments of limited rooms, by employing a Japanese from Hilo for periodical housecleaning days and for the family wash, and sometimes when we entertain at luncheon or afternoon tea. For while we live in this faraway place we are not without a certain amount of society. In our tiny home we have, in fact, received many distinguished guests from practically every corner of the earth.

"Drawn by interest or curiosity, as the case may be, to have a closeup view of Kilauea, many travelers spanning the Pacific have journeyed over from Honolulu to observe the crater and its pit of everlasting fire.

"Our only constant companions in our unusual home are a pet dog and a large, handsome gray cat. Both show an extraordinary attachment for their volcano home and seldom wander far from the threshold.

"As we live in a country, made by the action of earthquake and volcano, with the entire surface of the land about as ragged with the numerous eruptions of stone, lava, there is little or no vegetation. So we brought to the crater soil which made it possible after some years to grow a few big ferns in the tiny front yard.

"The greatest disadvantage of our location is lack of fresh water. All we have is rain water, which is caught and carefully stored in large tanks nearby. We are wholly dependent on rain water for all practical purposes."

Mrs. Jaggar's appearance suggested perfect health and a sunny temperament, bearing out her contention that living in a volcano is less disastrous to the nerves than existence in a noise-ridden city.

"All the thousand and one cures and suggested cures for the tattered nerves of the city dweller are unfamiliar terms to Mrs. Jaggar.

"One gets to understand the habits and peculiarities of volcanoes and the numerous slight earthquake tremors, and one does not fear," she said.

Prior to her marriage Mrs. Jaggar was the widow of a ranchman on the island. The Jaggars still maintain a small farm near the coast, and practically their sole diversion, with the exception of their occasional guests to afternoon tea, is represented by a visit to the poultry farm, which also includes a small number of pigs.

Free from arduous household duties, Mrs. Jaggar has considerable time to assist her husband in his work. She helps keep the voluminous records of his intensive research work, acts as stenographer much of the time in answering his mail and helps with the issue of the weekly bulletin devoted to the volcano and earthquake research work of Hawaii, issued by the Hawaiian Research society.

IRISH BOUNDARY NOW IN DISPUTE

Ulster Unwilling to Surrender Area Demanded by Free State.

Washington, D. C.—"The complicated Irish boundary question, now stirring Ireland and England, has numerous aspects, any one of which might be responsible for the present disagreements," says a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic society.

The bulletin deals with the region along the boundary line between the Irish Free State, or southern Ireland, and Ulster or northern Ireland. The desire of the Free State to add to its territory portions of the counties of Tyrone and Fermanagh, as it has already added the former Ulster counties of Monoghan, Donegal and Cavan, constitutes the present problem. Ulster is unwilling to surrender the additional territory.

"Ulster, in the northeastern corner of Ireland, is in the odd position of being a part of Ireland which is in large part not Irish," says the bulletin. "Three hundred years ago the British King James I, with the desire to Anglicize a part of Ireland, decided to 'plant' a colony of English and Scotch. What is known as the Ulster plantation followed.

"Other 'plantations' had been attempted in southern Ireland without accomplishing anything save suffering to the natives and loss to the 'undertakers,' as the imported landlords were termed. But the Ulster plantation took root and flourished.

Scotch Blood Dominant in Ulster.

"The original plan of the king was to have English settlers dominant in Ulster; but he also permitted the Scotch to participate. English settlers were not easily interested, however, while the Scotch flocked in, making the plantation dominantly Scottish. By 1660 the population of Ulster consisted of some 80,000 inhabitants of Scotch blood, 5,000 of English ancestry, and 40,000 Irish. Altogether probably about 100,000 Scotsmen moved to Ulster. The English were soon merged with the Scotch but the Irish and Scotch strains remained almost entirely independent.

"Ulster differs economically from the rest of Ireland. Either the Scotch immigrants had a greater propensity toward industry or their economic conditions were more favorable. At any rate Ulster has become the marked industrial region of Ireland while the remainder of the country, save in the larger cities, has not followed this line of development.

"Physically Ulster has a greater proportion of highland than most other parts of Ireland, but a large part of the land is in cultivation. Flax is seen everywhere, especially in the eastern counties, in the neighborhood of Belfast, the great world center of the linen industry.

"The present border between the Irish Free State and the State of Northern Ireland, created in 1920 and 1921, extends through a rather rough country. Dundalk on the east coast, is just south of the line. Near this city is one of the passes through the hills used since earliest times in Ireland; and because of this situation Dundalk's neighborhood has been the scene of numerous battles. Farther west the boundary touches the long, deep valley in which lies Lough Erne, the longest and the next largest lake in Ireland.

Ulster Has Shrunk.

"Formerly Ulster consisted of the northern tier of counties from coast to coast. When the two self-governing states were formed, however, Donegal, largest of the Ulster counties, occupying the northwestern corner of Ireland, was attached to the Free State. The boundary of the State of Northern Ireland, therefore, does not now reach the Atlantic but turns at its southwestern corner a few miles short of the coast and runs northeastward between Donegal on the west and Fermanagh, Tyrone and Londonderry on the east to Lough Foyle, an inlet at the very top of the island. The State of Northern Ireland, therefore, occupies only a small segment in the northeastern corner of Ireland. Readjustment of the boundary as desired by the Free State would concentrate the northern division still closer into the northeast corner.

"Though small in territory the State of Northern Ireland has a concentrated population. Its area is less than one-sixth that of Ireland but it contains more than a quarter of the island's inhabitants.

"The United States has more than an academic interest in all that affects Ireland. Two of the most important streams of immigration that have reached America came from the island: one the so-called Scotch-Irish from Ulster; the other, the Irish from south of the Ulster line. The Scotch-Irish early felt the weight of repressive English laws both in the religious and economic fields. They began emigrating to America in large numbers during the latter part of the Eighteenth century and it is estimated that they made up one-sixth of all the colonists by the time of the American Revolution. They were prominent in that struggle and later became the frontiersmen, playing an important part in winning the Middle West and the West.

"The main stream of immigration from southern Ireland took place in the Nineteenth century. The genius of the newcomers for politics has made itself felt in local, state and national governments."

Old Stamps Are Found

London.—During the turning over of old documents in the record office here, a batch of New South Wales postage stamps of the 1855 issue was discovered. Collectors value them at $4,500. The stamps were attached to a report sent to the colonial secretary by the governor of New South Wales.

PREHISTORIC AMERICA HAD ITS GRAVE ROBBERS

Expedition Finds Burial Chambers in New Mexico Were Looted by Vandals.

Washington, D. C.—Grave robbers disturbed the rest of prehistoric Americans just as they despoiled the tombs of the Pharaohs along the Nile.

Neil M. Judd, leader of the National Geographic society's Pueblo Bonito expedition, which is working at Chaco Canyon, New Mexico, writes:

"After clearing three more burial chambers we now have 65 skeletons and have solved the riddle of the headless bodies and the disturbed condition of the burials. Prehistoric vandals did the trick.

"Pueblo Bonito—the Beautiful Village—must have been famous in ancient times, as at present, for the wealth of its primitive jewelry.

"Grave robbers, most likely tribal enemies on raiding expeditions, discovered the room burials and stripped the bodies of their turquoise and shell ornaments. In their search they showed a disregard for the dead. Burials were disturbed; portions of the bodies were torn from the remainder and the heads, in most instances, placed in a corner or along the walls of the room.

The National Geographic society's expedition has just completed another successful summer's work in the valley which was the metropolis of pre-Columbian America. In that region Pueblo Bonito, a Chevy Chase of the American aborigines, has yielded remarkable specimens of early Indian art, jewels, domestic utensils, and other paraphernalia of a civilization which, in many of its aspects is as interesting as that of early Egypt or Mesopotamia, and which, explorers say, apparently had no connection with Old World civilizations.

Pigeons Prove Ability as Message Carriers

Berne, Switzerland.—An interesting test of the reliability of pigeons as message bearers was recently made by the Swiss general staff. Twenty doves were taken to the highest accessible point of the "Jungfrau" and released. The day was cloudless in the upper regions of the Alps, but all the cities and valleys were screened from view by a thick layer of fog.

Seventeen doves started in a straight line for Berne. Two started in the wrong direction, and a third became lost for a while in the valley. But the entire twenty finally reached their destination. The three erring doves were only ten minutes behind the leaders in getting home.

Shoves Babe in Window to Reserve Train Seat

New York.—Police of the Long Island railroad are looking for a young man, seemingly too young to be a father, who reserved his seat in a passenger coach at a platform in Jamaica by thrusting a baby through the window, then sauntered leisurely behind the crowd clamoring for admission by way of the door.

Thwart Berlin Shoe Thieves

Berlin.—Berlin held its first big "shoe fair" recently, but the left shoe only of each pair was displayed as a precaution against theft. The chief attractions were in women's wear.

WASTE ELIMINATION

Improper elimination of waste materials is the source of many bodily ills. The kidneys, liver and stomach are affected and attendant aches and pains are but forerunners of more serious trouble should the condition develop into chronic constipation.

Frankly, constipation is not easily corrected. Temporary relief can be obtained. But we want more than that. We want to win that sense of well-being that comes only when the entire digestive system functions naturally and consistently.

Faithful treatment with a non-habit forming medicine like Jaques' Digestive Capsules will, in most cases, accomplish this. By ministering to the entire digestive tract, and not to just one organ, this remedy not only corrects constipation but helps the whole digestive system to function as Nature intended. 60 cents at druggists or postpaid from Jaques Capsule Co., Plattsburg, N. Courses Offered in Public Health

Correspondence School Conducted by Institutions.

Washington.—Correspondence and reading courses in public health have been conducted by seven state departments of health and by six universities in this country in the last two years, according to the United States public health service, which for more than a year has been collecting data on the subject from the executive officers of state departments of health and from the universities with which Class A medical schools are affiliated.

Of the courses given by departments of health, five are for sanitarians—those conducted in Kansas, Illinois, Ohio, New Mexico and Pennsylvania. In addition, the Virginia state health department offers a correspondence course for teachers; in both Virginia and Minnesota a course is given in the hygiene of maternity and infancy for mothers, and a second course is offered in Pennsylvania, one for persons connected with industries, schools and with civic and religious organizations.

"In no case is tuition charged for the courses conducted by state departments of health," says a summary of the survey. "Mimeographed or printed lessons are distributed in several instances, and in two cases, textbooks are used. Those taking the course are required to answer questions by mail from time to time, in four or five instances in connection with each lesson. The number enrolled varies a great deal, so also does the length of course.

Some Courses for Laymen.

"The correspondence courses offered by universities are in five instances conducted by the extension division of the university and in one case by the department of hygiene. One university conducts only one course, two conduct two courses, two, four courses, and one conducts seven courses. Most courses appeared to be offered primarily for those who are now or intend to be engaged in public health work, although a few courses apparently are for laymen.

"In all cases tuition is charged, textbooks are used and examinations given. Academic credit is granted for all courses, except in one university, where credit is given when the student is enrolled in the school of medicine. The length of courses varies from 20 to 40 lessons. While the courses offered by universities may have a more dignified status than those offered by state departments of health, the number of students enrolled is not large.

"The Ohio state department of health has prepared a course, with the assistance of the International Health board, for persons employed in public health work on a full-time or part-time basis, not including, however, nurses. The work requires one year, but no definite time is set for completing it. The Kansas state board of health, which also received assistance from the International Health board, established in January, 1923, a correspondence course for sanitarians (mostly part-time county health officers). Of the 105 who enrolled the entire number completed the course. The course was repeated in 1924.

"The bureau of public health of the department of public welfare of New Mexico organized for city and county health officers a correspondence course in 1920, consisting of 40 lessons given at weekly intervals. The course was taken by 50 persons. The work has not been conducted in a systematic way since 1920. The Virginia state board of health operates two correspondence courses, one for teachers and one for mothers.

"The Minnesota state board of health, through its division of child hygiene, conducts a correspondence course in the hygiene of maternity and infancy.

"The Pennsylvania department of health, through its division of public health education, has conducted two courses which it designated as correspondence courses.

"The University of Chicago maintains a large home study department. Seven courses are given in the department of hygiene and bacteriology.

"The University of Wisconsin at present offers through its extension division approximately four courses—two for mothers and women generally, one for nurses and one for health officers. The University of Arkansas announces through its general extension divisions, courses in the following subjects: School hygiene, sewerage, water works, and illuminating engineering. The University of Kansas announces through its correspondence study bureau a non-credit course in home health and home nursing, 'which is taken by many women over the state.' The University of Tennessee, through its department of hygiene, offered in January 1923, a correspondence course in personal and community hygiene.

U. S. CITIZENS IN PALESTINE FAVORED

Status to Remain Until Ratification of Mandate.

Jerusalem.—Citizens of the United States living in Palestine are accorded privileges over and above those of citizens and subjects of states who are members of the League of Nations.

This is true now pending American ratification of the British mandate for Palestine, but will probably cease to be the case after the United States government will have signed the convention recognizing the mandate.

The convention, it is believed, will secure for Americans in Palestine the same rights as fall to subjects of states who are league members, but no more.

The status of Americans in Palestine will then probably be the same as in Syria, to the French mandate for which United States was reported recently to have agreed.

For the present Americans here enjoy the rights of capitulations which, before the dismemberment of the Turkish empire, all great powers insisted on maintaining for their citizens. America has not renounced its capitulatory rights in Palestine, and the American consul is the only one holding court and trying cases between American residents.

The position of the American consular court in Jerusalem is a little vague, because it runs parallel with the British system of justice now in force.

The British government, however, is not known to have raised any objection to the existence of the consular court. The Palestine authorities have even gone out of their way to effect judgments made by the consular court. An American sentenced to prison by the consular court may be locked up in a Palestine jail.

United States Consul Oscar S. Heizer, having received no instructions to the contrary, continues to sit in judgment over American residents who get into trouble, but he is not sure how long this condition will continue.

Wind Robs Man of Three $100 Bills

San Francisco.—The mischievous wind that sprang up recently to swoop down on Market street, flapping the skirts of the flappers cost William Wilson of No. 1145 Howard street $300.

As Wilson was taking out his wallet to buy a Sunday paper the rapacious, predatory zephyr caught three $100 bills and carried them down the street. Wilson leaped to catch his flying money, but the gust carried them around a corner and, although he spent most of his morning searching the streets, aided by a good-sized crowd, he was unable to recover the bills.

GEORGIA BALKS AT CONTROL BY SOVIET

Melville Chater Gives Vivid Picture of Country.

Washington.—With nearly all of the republic of Georgia in the hands of insurgents seeking to throw off Soviet Russian control, that country, save in the capital, Tiflis, and the Black sea port, Batum, is in much the condition that it was in its independent days following the World war. What the country was like before it succumbed to soviet influence is told in a bulletin from the Washington headquarters of the National Geographic society, quoting a communication from Melville Chater.

"Though one has penetrated fairly far into the East at Tiflis," says the bulletin, "if one expects vistas of caravans, camels and Rebekahs-at-the-well, he will suffer disillusionment in his first impressions. The Golovinsky Prospekt, which runs through the heart of the Georgian capital, is as handsome a bit of modern metropolitanism as can be found anywhere. With its restaurants and cafes, its jewelers, art shops and opera, its vice regal palace, the Prospekt, especially when seen in the lounging hour, is undeniably chic.

Wasp-Waisted Males.

"Here stroll Russians, Georgians, Armenians and the representatives of a score of mountain tribes who have business in the new capital. There is a splendor of uniforms and of sidearms, the Caucasian national costume dominating the picture. A very long, swagger overgarment of brown or gray, padded square at the shoulders, with wasplike waist, and descending as a smartly flared skirt—this, together with high, heelless boots, a square astrakhan cap, a clanking sword, two magnificently chased daggers, a brace of pistols and sixteen fountain pens strung across his chest represents what I would term the picturesque scenery worn by your typical Georgian in war, in peace, and in the bosom of his countrymen.

"What I have called fountain pens turned out to be more weapons—hollow tubes, anciently designed to contain powder and shot.

"One looks at these magnificently accoutered swaggerers, with their stiff mustaches and close-shaven skulls, and thinks of comic opera and of the dear old kingdom of Zenda; also one trembles for the League of Nations, fearing that the Georgian will never consent to a reduction of his armament.

"Mere militarism has no mortgage on uniforms at Tiflis. Everybody wears one, including school children and their teachers, according to Russian custom; and hundreds upon hundreds of civilians are thus attired because, clothes being scarce and expensive, they prefer buying some officer's cast-off outfit.

"The 'lounging hour' is important in Georgia. In fact, there are some sixteen of these to the Georgian's day, and perhaps it would be simpler to speak of the working hour. Between two and three o'clock in the afternoon, down go the steel lattices which guard the shop windows—then Tiflis resumes its national pastime of joie de vivre until six o'clock of the following morning; for that is the hour when the Georgians' all-night parties break up—break up, I mean, with shots exchanged across the table.

"The Georgian is renowned for his hospitality. His customary greeting is, 'While in Tiflis you will consider my home yours,'—an offer which was tendered us so regularly that we suffered, I may almost say, from an embarrassment of homes.

Dinner Parties All-Night Affairs.

"The Georgian dinner party, a mighty matter of courses and wines, begins at 2:30 in the afternoon and lasts until 5. Then there will be a dance in the evening, refreshments commencing at 9 o'clock and continuing between dance-numbers until the company reels homeward in the dawn.

"Occasionally the floor is cleared for a dagger-dance, a picturesque and barbaric business performed to a rhythmic accompaniment of hand-clapping by some tall, beskirted native, who prances murderously about with from five to seven daggers held between his teeth.

"The Georgian public function is a superb affair of uniforms, healths drunk, huzzahs, celebrities carried shoulder-high about the room, and a chorus of liveried trumpeters who sound fanfares at the close of every toast. Once again one realizes that though the Georgians have gone red republican, Zenda's dear old comic-opera kingdom still lies deep in their hearts."

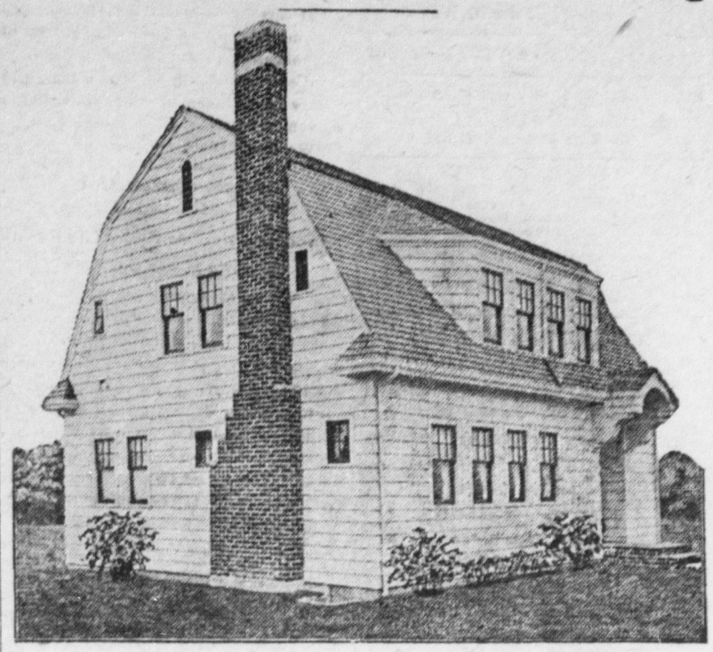
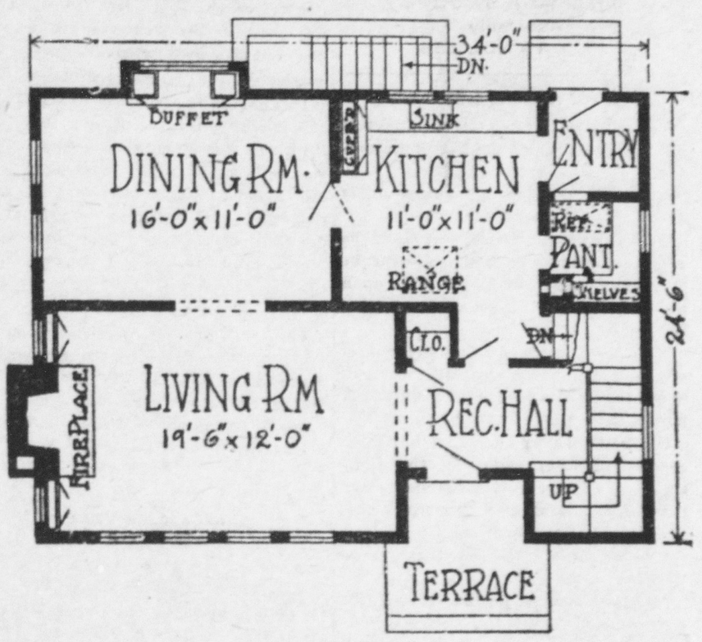
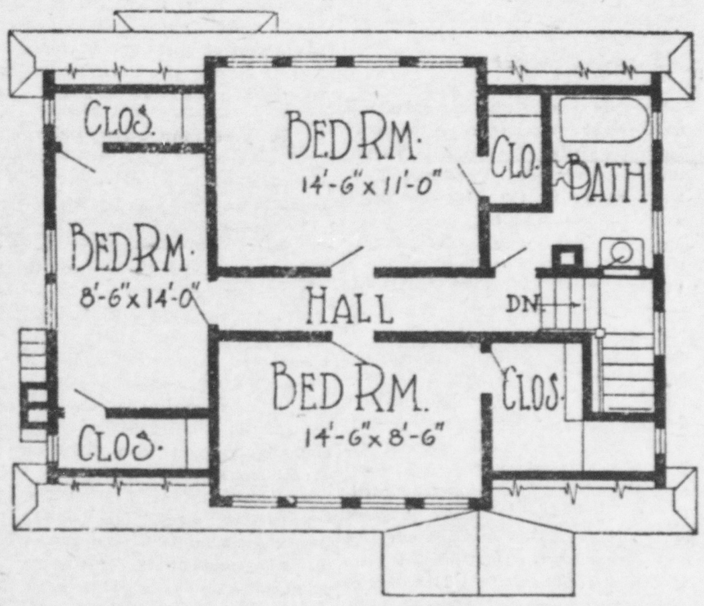
Colonial Type of Home Adapted to Almost Any American Setting





First Floor Plan.



Second Floor Plan.

By WILLIAM A. RADFORD

Mr. William A. Radford will answer questions and give advice FREE OF COST on all problems pertaining to the subject of building, for the readers of this paper. On account of his wide experience as Editor, Author and Manufacturer, he is, without doubt, the highest authority on the subject. Address all inquiries to William A. Radford, No. 1827 Prairie avenue, Chicago, Ill., and only inclose two-cent stamp for reply.

Truly colonial in its well-conceived proportions and modest ornamentation this six-room home, with its wide clapboard walls attractively painted, is adapted to almost any American setting, although one naturally thinks of such a home as situated in the northern part of the United States.

The attractive hooded entrance, the interesting roof with the dormer windows and other exterior details combine to make the exterior of this home most attractive, while the interior arrangement is well planned for the convenience of the family.

The brick terrace and recessed entrance lead into the reception hall which contains the stairway to the upper floor and a closet for wraps. Directly off this reception hall is the well-planned living room, 19½ by 12 feet, with the fireplace well placed on one end and flanked on either side by a built-in bookcase. The wall spaces of this room and the placing of the windows suggest many attractive arrangements of the furniture.

Directly behind the living room and opening from it is the dining room where a recess is provided for the buffet, a device which adds materially to the usable space in the room. Above this piece of furniture is a window, which insures adequate lighting and ventilation for this room.

The kitchen has been the object of special care on the part of the designer, with the sink and cupboard grouped together and the range within easy reach. The entry is so constructed as to make possible the icing of the refrigerator from the entry.

On the second floor are three bedrooms and the bath. All of the bedrooms are provided with unusual amounts of closet space.

Window Installation an Important Home Feature

A system of window installation which will permit the entire series of sash used to enclose a porch to be swung to the sides of the opening allows the designers of homes to add a desirable feature.

The makers of the window hardware which will permit this method of building declare that rooms so inclosed may be thrown open to the cooling breezes in the summer, and when closed may be utilized as the other rooms of the home during the winter months.

In appearance the windows are of the casement type, with the screens applied outside in the manner usual, with double-hung sash. The entire window space may be thrown open or one sash at any particular point may be opened. When open the sash fold together at an angle against the casing at the edge of the window.

Careful Attention Should Be Given to Repair Work

Keep your home in condition and you will find that in the end the cost of maintenance is much lower than if you neglect the repairs until forced to take measures.

One weakened part of the structure transfers itself to other parts with the result that there are two items which need attention through the neglect of the first.

Roofing renewal is an item which in many cases is put off until the leaks have damaged other parts of the house, leaky faucets and other defective plumbing likewise.

In case of a faulty condition in the home, repair at once and you will get by with far less expense. A home can be likened to your teeth and everyone knows how procrastination adds to the dental bill.

WHERE WILL HE STAND?

Naturally the voters are asking where he stands on the presidency.

Will he vote for Davis? And if he will, how will he square himself with the LaFollette supporters who look upon Davis as a mere representative of Wall Street?

And if he votes for LaFollette how will he make himself right with the old-line Democrats to whom he must look for the bulk of his support?

On the Democratic ticket he has back of him a platform endorsing the Constitution. Back of him on the LaFollette ticket is a declaration of principles that would wreck the Constitution.

Where does he stand on these questions?

And for whom would he vote if the election were thrown into Congress?

The Republican condidate is on record as favoring the Coolidge platform, preservation of the Constitution and law enforcement.

Why take a chance?

Anybody reading the foregoing editorial would naturally assume that it referred primarily to Edward F. Benson, the Democratic and LaFollette candidate for Congress in the 23rd district, of which Centre County is a part. It was published a day or two ago in the Harrisburg Telegraph as applying to the Democratic and LaFollette candidate in that congressional district. But it applies with equal force to Mr. Benson's candidacy in our district. The one hope of LaFollette for defeating Coolidge is to throw the election of the President into Congress. The LaFollette managers, it is only fair to assume, are backing Mr. Benson with the expectation that he will repay them if the opportunity is afforded. It is a part of the LaFollette program to try and elect Democratic candidates for Congress wherever possible It rests with the Republicans of the 23rd district to say whether they will allow this to be done. Mr. Swoope, the Republican nominee, stands behind President Coolidge and the Constitution. Mr. Benson stands behind LaFollette who advocates wrecking the Constitution. Any objections some Republicans might have toward Mr. Swoope become of trifling importance when compared with the damage that will result if he is defeated and Mr. Benson is elected. Every Republican should carefully consider that phase of the matter before casting his vote on Nov 4th.

REDEEM PENNSYLVANIA.

Republican State Chairman Baker has issued an urgent appeal to Republicans throughout the State to exert themselves to the utmost to make Pennsylvania the banner Commonwealth for Coolidge and Dawes on election day. With the exception of seven campaigns in the last fifty years, Pennsylvania has stood at the top of the list of States in the size of pluralities returned for Republican candidates for President. Four years ago Pennsylvania fell behind New York and Illinois in the size of pluralities given President Harding. This year it is hoped that Pennsylvania will redeem herself by giving President Coolidge the largest plurality he will receive in any State in the Union.

Chairman Baker's telegram marks the beginning of a final drive not only to make an unprecedented sweep for the Republican national ticket, but to repeat the record of four years ago, when a solid Republican delegation from Pennsylvania was sent to the Sixty-seventh Congress.

The Baker telegram reads:

"Your attention called to necessity of returning Pennsylvania to its rightful place at the head of Republican States. Four years ago New York and Illinois led us in point of plurality for Republican nominees.

"This should not happen on November 4 in view of the Coolidge-Dawes strength throughout State.

"Necessary, however, for every county chairman to do his utmost. Overconfidence is only danger to cause. Organize with view of getting out every vote.

"If this is done, Pennsylvania will once more become first in the galaxy of Republican Commonwealths.

"Please communicate this message to county committeemen and active men women workers.

"We must regain our laurels."

FARM CALENDAR

Timely Reminders From The Pennsylvania State College.

GARDEN SOIL

This is the time of year to plan to improve the garden soil for next year. If the soil is heavy it needs organic matter and 10 tons of manure to ¼ of an acre is not too much. If possible it should be applied and turned under this fall. Allow the surface to remain rough over winter. Fine sand or the siftings of coal ashes put on in the spring will help in lightening the soil and save many a backache because it is easier to cultivate.

POULTRY

No birds should be allowed to roost in the open at this time of year. Many fall colds can be avoided by housing flocks in dry houses which are free from drafts. Colds at this time of the year are an indication of poor housing conditions.

LANDSCAPING

It is not too late to place orders for deciduous material to be planted this fall. With the exception of magnolias, azaleas, altheas and a few other succulent rooted plants fall planting can be carried on into December if the ground is mulched before frost gets into the ground in the area that is to be planted.

"DRESSING AND CURING MEAT"

This is the title of a 7-lesson free home study course offered by the correspondence department of the Penna. State College agricultural school. The information it contains should come in handy during the fall and winter. A postal will bring you a home study catalogue from the college.

BIG CABBAGE YEAR

The past season has been a very favorable one for the growing of cabbage in Pennsylvania and New York. There is an abundant supply and the indications are that the prices will be low for some time. Unless they have storage facilities available, Pennsylvania growers are advised by State College extension specialists to work off part of their crop before Nov. 1 as out of state shipments will start coming in about that time.

Congressman Swoope Here.

Congressman William I. Swoope, of Clearfield, who is a nominee for re-election on the Republican ticket, greeted numerous old friends in Bellefonte last Saturday. He was enroute to New York where he delivered several speeches this week for Coolidge and Dawes. By invitation of the President, Congressman Swoope will speak at a number of meetings in various States before the close of the campaign. Regarding his campaign for re-election, Congressman Swoope said that he has received most encouraging reports from all sections of the congressional district and that he is entirely confident of the result at the polls on Nov. 4th. Mr. Benson, the Democratic nominee for Congress, has the endorsement of the LaFollette campaign managers and is said to have declared in a recent speech that he is in full sympathy with the LaFollette platform. State Chairman Kutz, of the LaFollette party, is said to have personally filed Mr. Benson's nomination petition at Harrisburg, which is regarded as notice that the LaFollette managers class Mr. Benson as a typical representative of their policies.

TON LITTER WINNER

Peters Bros., of Stormstown, Score High Record in Pork Yield.

The distinction of producing one ton of pork from a litter of pigs in 180 days was earned by Peters Bros., of Stormstown, according to County Agent R. C. Blaney. This honor makes them a member of the Keystone Ton Litter Club of Pennsylvania.

This litter was the product of a pure-bred Poland China sow and contained 10 pigs. They were farrowed April 4th and were weighed on Oct. 4th, making a total weight of 2381 5 pounds, or an average of 238.1 pound, per pig. During the feeding period they made an individual gain of 1.3 pounds per day. From the last records one pound of pork was produced for 9.4¢ and sold for 11¢, making a net profit of 1.6¢ per pound.

This litter was pastured on alfalfa and sweet clover pasture, and in addition were fed mixed chop, middlings, corn and skim milk, which was later supplemented with tankage.

A lot of interest has been shown over the state in this contest, and as far as the results have come in this record stands among the highest.

Small Fire at College.

Fire last Thursday morning damaged a small wooden building adjoining the State College greenhouse and before gotten under control caused a loss of about $250. The fire caught in a room which had been occupied by two students. The cause has not been determined. The student volunteer fire department with their new motor truck did good service in preventing spread of the flames.

CONFESSED TO ARSON

Beech Creek Man Says Woman Prompted Burning of Barn.

Placed on the witness stand at a hearing at Lock Haven last Thursday, Grant Reeder confessed that he had burned the barn of G. M. Johnson, nearby Beech Creek, and that he had done so at the instigation of Mrs. Annie Salmon, with whom Reeder makes him home. Reeder's sworn testimony was startling and created amazement among the neighbors and friends of the principals in the case. As a result of the hearing, Mrs Salmon was held for court under $5000 bail, which she furnished. Reeder was unable to give bail and had to go to jail.

According to Reeder, he fired the barn because Mrs. Salmon wanted revenge on Johnson who had been a witness against her in a recent suit in the Clinton County Courts. She had charged Frank Kunes, a neighbor, with defamation of character. She lost the case. A night or two later Johnson's barn was burned. When he saw his barn in flames, Johnson telephoned some friends and had them watch the home of Mrs. Salmon. They observed Reeder approach from the direction of the burning barn. He was arrested, whereupon he implicated Mrs. Salmon and a warrant for her was issued. He declared Mrs. Salmon was very angry over the verdict against her, and was cross at the many witnesses who testified against her character, including Mr. Johnson, and that she exclaimed: "There is a way of getting square with these people who are so anxious to go into court and testify against me. We can burn Johnson's barn down; you can do it like a whistle. Then we'll fix McCloskey's automobile shed."

According to the Lock Haven Express, Reeder said Mrs. Salmon kept talking about burning the Johnson barn and repeatedly urged him to do the job, and she cited the names of two other men who would have the sand to do things and she challenged him to be as good a man as they would be.

Reeder said the matter preyed heavily on his mind and he felt "when they were pulling money out of Mrs. Salmon they were also pulling it out of me." He said he went out of the house and after studying over the matter concluded that if he did not do something she would continue to go after him.

Reeder then described his trip from the Salmon home to the Johnson stable; that he first looked into the stall to see to it that there were no horses or cattle in the barn, and then went and struck a match and applied it to a pile of hay near the bottom of the steps leading to the mow. As he saw the flames spread, he said he was sorry he did it and if he could have stayed the progress of the flames he would have done so. He testified Mrs. Salmon had instructed him to keep clear of the road and travel through the woods, and to hide in case any one approached, and she had given him the matches with which to kindle the fire, and he further testified she told him after he had started the fire to "run like hell."

OVER THE COUNTY

Engineers are surveying the Nittany mountain road to Centre Hall preparatory to a number of changes and improvements which will probably be started next spring. Several curves at the foot of the mountain on the Centre Hall side are to be eliminated.

The Athletic Association of the Centre Hall High School is evidently an "up and coming" organization. They recently loaned $100 to the school toward the purchase of a piano, thereby saving the institution $25 which was taken off the purchase price on account of the large cash payment.

Some motorists say that a speed trap has been inaugurated in Centre Hall. In commenting on the fact the "Centre Reporter" remarks that the most ideal place and the safest one in the town for fast driving has been selected by the local authorities as likely to bring in the largest financial returns.

"Andy" Lytle the "Grand Old Man of State College" was honored at the State-North Carolina football game recently, being carried to the grandstand by a group of freshmen in a specially constructed chair. "Andy" has been a veteran football rooter at State for more years than most people can remember. He was also elected an honorary member of this year's freshman class. He has used up more than 40,000 miles in railroad tickets following Penn State teams, and helped build the first college building 65 years ago. He is now more than 80 years old.

The Odd Fellows of Centre Hall, installed officers on Saturday evening of last week, as follows: Noble Grand, Samuel Gross; Vice Grand, Roy Datrow; Secretary, Thomas L. Moore; Treasurer, Edward W. Crawford; Warden, Chester A. Spyker; Conductor, Lawrence Runkle; Inside Guard, Ralph E. Dinges; Outside Guard; J. F. Lutz; R. S. to N. G., V. A. Auman; L. S. to N. G., Ralph Homan; R. S. to V. G. Jonas Boal; Chaplain, M. L. Emerick; R. S. S., Russel Brungart; L. S. S., Paul Bradford; Trustee, Wm. H. Homan. The ceremony was presided over by D. D. G. M., Edward Zong, of Boalsburg. A number of members of the Boalsburg lodge accompanied the D. D. G. M. and several brothers gave fine talks for the good of the order.

Wealthy, but Without Power to Enjoy Life

"Now that you've got me talking," said a retired business man of St. Louis, who is going to Europe, "I might as well admit that I'm not having as much fun out of being what you'd call comfortably fixed financially as I looked forward to in my hard-working days.

"I suppose a good many old fellows would admit they are in the same fix if their pride would let them. I worked too hard, not hard enough to kill me or wear me out, but too hard to form a taste for the best things that money can buy.

"The lesson my experience has taught me is that keeping your shoulder to the wheel and pushing ahead, looking neither to the right nor left, and so forth, is not a complete set of directions for making a success in life.

"The rules may get a bank account for a fellow without unusual gifts, but they overlook too many things that count.

"I can't get settled down to a book. I can't sit through a play with any deep stuff in it, and I've even neglected to learn how to make myself agreeable in company, mixed or just men. Yet I had all that stuff in me when I was a kid—used to read a lot, in fact.

"Take my advice, and if you ever get the money-making bee, don't let it get you, for, unless you're a world-beater, no matter how well you make out, you won't be any too near the head of the list."—Philadelphia Bulletin.

Dutch Unfortunate in Colonization Ventures

The celebration on the continent commemorating the tercentenary of the foundation of New York recalls the fact that the great American city was originally a Dutch settlement. It was not until 1664 that it was captured by the British, and the original name of New Amsterdam was changed to New York.

Fate, indeed, has been unkind to the Dutch as colonizers. Not only did they lose their extensive settlements in New York state and Pennsylvania, but their colony at the Cape of Good Hope, founded in 1651, also passed into British hands, says London Answers.

Other instances of lost colonies could be given, especially if those which changed hands during or after the great war were included. But how many people realize that at one time Egypt was a French protectorate, and that before the advent of Clive the French power in India was greater than the British? The earliest European settlements in India, indeed, were Portuguese; but the Portuguese were driven out by the Dutch, and the latter—again unfortunately—by the British.

Schools in Early Days

The first schools were started in the early history of mankind. Schools were first held out of doors and the teaching was conducted orally, similar to the Hindu Brahman schools. Among the Hebrews the laws were expounded by oral teaching from the porches of the temples. The amount of instruction greatly increased from the mere oral teaching of the law until it involved letters and arithmetic. Among the Spartans the education was almost entirely along new lines. Elementary schools became common after the Christian era and in 64 A. D. they were made obligatory. In Athens nearly all of the schools were private, teaching music and literature, reading, writing, arithmetic, geography and drawing. In early Rome the schools taught reading and writing and sometimes arithmetic.

Somali Fond of Song

Musical instruments—even the tom-tom, so dear to the heart of most African natives—are unknown to the Somali, who, none the less, take great pleasure in singing and dancing. Their songs are not by any means casual chants but have special significance, and are applicable to certain occasions. For example, there is a "Song of Thanksgiving for the finding of water, after a long journey," and songs for the loading and unloading of caravans, but most of their music is of a religious nature; and there is a "Song of Burial," sung when the 20-foot mound is raised above the remains of a chief and fenced around with a strong palisade of logs placed transversely between stout posts. Of all their dances the Somali place the war dance first.

Gave the Game Away

Among the side shows there was a collection of "freaks"—armless wonders, living skeletons, fat women and so forth, according to a story told by Charles B. Cochran. About the best draw of the lot was the bearded lady. One day the regular attendant who collected the admission money was temporarily absent, his place being taken by a little girl. A gentleman who had been deeply interested in this particular freak of nature remarked casually to the child as he was passing out: "I suppose, my dear, that the lady inside is your mother?"

"Oh, no, sir!" the little girl replied, momentarily taken off her guard by the unexpected query. "She's my dad!"

EAGLEVILLE WINS

Station Burned at Beech Creek to be Rebuilt at Eagleville.

A hot fight which has been waging for two months between the rival towns of Beech Creek and Eagleville finally terminated on last Friday when the Pennsylvania Railroad was ordered by the Public Service Commission, at Harrisburg, to maintain a station at the latter place.

About two months ago the station at Beech Creek was burned to the ground by a fire of alleged incendiary origin. Since then the agent, D. A. Barlett of Bellefonte, has been freezing in a temporary structure consisting of an old box car while the rival towns staged their fight for the preference. Eagleville insisted that residents of Beech Creek would not be inconvenienced by the removal of the station and that there was more business in their town than in Beech Creek. Other reasons were set forth and upheld by about a dozen witnesses. Attorney James C. Furst was engaged by Eagleville to represent them at Harrisburg and succeeded in securing the station for that town. Work will be started on the new building immediately.

Animal Feuds Spring From Various Causes

That animals carry on feuds with other animals is a fact known to natural history authorities; but most animals are prone to avoid hostilities that will lead to nothing but wounds.

Most creatures fully comprehend their own powers and those of others capable of inflicting injury, and they are unwilling to risk possible hurt or even engage in violent effort to little purpose. Thus, declares a writer in the Scientific American, the puma and the bears, though undoubtedly possessing a hatred for each other due to their seeking similar game, hold a truce rarely if ever broken.

Feuds between different species, one or both of which threaten the safety of the other's young, are not uncommon, and this is the chief cause of such hatreds as exist between the wildcat and the wolf, the mink and the fox, the raccoon and the weasels. The enmity that the crow displays toward the hawks is an example, and it shows also by the suspicion with which all herbivora regard members of the larger felines and canines.

Among the reptiles certain feuds exist that are more difficult to explain; such is the king snake's desire to destroy all poisonous and some non-venomous species larger and seemingly more powerful than itself, says London Tit-Bits. Nor is it understood why the rattlesnake shows a readiness to inflict its horribly aggressive defense upon dogs, cats, larger birds and humans, and regards with indifference the nearness of horses and cattle, unless trodden upon. Its enmity for the hog is natural enough.

It may seem strange also, considering the small intelligence with which we credit reptiles in general, that the skunk and some snakes readily distinguish from carnivorous animals deer and cattle to feed upon the flies that they attract.

When Tony Scored

The judge was examining Tony, who was anxious to take out citizenship papers.

"Where is the capital of the United States?" the judge asked.

"I don't know," Tony muttered and hung his head.

"Who is the President of the United States?"

After an interval came the same answer. To all appearances the Italian was so nervous that he could remember nothing; nor could he read the preamble to the Constitution, which was the next test.

The judge dismissed him rather curtly with the advice to go home and study, and poor Tony slunk away. But when he was halfway to the door he turned suddenly and, much to the astonishment of every one in the courtroom, shouted at the judge:

"How many da banan' on da buch?"

The judge was plainly irritated. "I don't know," he said sharply. "What's that got to do with this?"

"You knowa your business; I knowa mine," replied Tony and strode out of the room.—Youth's Companion.

As It Seemed to Gladys

The head of the house had telephoned that he would bring home a guest to luncheon—a guest whom his wife realized he would delight to honor.

Preparations were made accordingly with results satisfactory to her hospitable and housewifely heart.

Unfortunately, six-year-old Gladys came in a trifle late. Sweeping the table with an all-embracing glance, "Hum!" she muttered, audibly as she climbed into her chair, "is this lunch?"

"Why, of course, it's luncheon, Gladys," said her mother, with a repressive gesture.

But Gladys was not to be stayed.

"Well," she replied, "maybe it is; but it looks exactly like Sunday dinner."

Sophisticated Sergeant

Two members of a legislature got into an argument about little or nothing and the debate waxed vigorous. Starting with unparliamentary language, they soon began to exchange violent threats. An immediate clamor was set up for the sergeant at arms, and eventually that functionary sauntered in.

"Separate 'em," urged one excited member, "separate 'em."

"Ain't they 40 feet apart?"

"But they are shaking fists."

"Aw, them's just gestures," said the sergeant at arms as he bit off a fresh chew.—Spokane Spokesman-Review.

Listening In

Mrs. W. B. K. writes: "A lady calling upon a friend in a boarding house remarked how plainly the conversation in the adjoining room could be heard. 'Isn't that a drawback?' she inquired.

"'Yes,' replied her friend, 'I waste such a lot of time.'"

The same contributor sends this:

"I thought you were going to have your hair bobbed."

"I was, but my husband gave me $50 to change my mind, so I am having my wrinkles taken out instead."—Boston Transcript.

Pest Attacks Pines

Ravages of the European sawfly threaten the complete defoliation of the pine trees of the United States. The pine nurseries and estates of New England and some of the North Atlantic states already have been attacked by the pest. The sawfly has been one of the greatest forest depredators in Europe.

VARIETIES OF HONEY THAT ARE POISONOUS

Some Mystery, but No Doubt, Regarding the Fact.

Honey was eaten in all parts of the ancient world, and the peculiarities of the various kinds were well known. Various kinds of honey were known which were unpleasant to the taste or deleterious in their effects. There was, for example, a Mauretanian honey which was unwholesome, says a writer in the Washington Post. The honey produced in the southeast corner of the Black sea, in the district which lies between Trebizond and Erzerum, was often "maddening" in its effects. The honey of Heracleia Pontica, farther to the west, was in certain seasons deleterious. The victim rolled upon the ground in an agonized sensation of extreme heat. Colchis, farther to the north, round the coast of the Black sea, has also fallen under suspicion of producing "maddening" honey.

My friend and colleague, Prof. McLean Thompson, has been kind enough to give me some information. Nothing, he tells me, can be found in the flowering records which can be used as evidence against any of the species of plants, which are quoted by the various authorities to prove that they are naturally poisonous, nor is anything known of the Black sea littoral which provides a basis for the idea that climate determined the poisonous nature of the honey. There are, in fact, no grounds for supposing that there is anything poisonous in the honey itself provided that it is collected normally by a nectar-collecting insect.

"But, in seasons," he says, "when the competition for nectar pollen is intense, many insect types adopt a biting habit, piercing the tissues of many plants of different type, in search of short cuts to food supply, while other types fail to develop this new habit. I have known many insects not drunk, but completely stupefied after a period of flower biting while collecting nectar. From this they recover after periods from 8 to 24 hours. The inference is that in seasons when the biting habit is common, honey may be poisoned frequently by the toxins of plants which have been bitten. I knew of so-called poisoned honey in Liege in a season when the biting habit was very common, and on asking a beekeeper on the point, he said that in 1893, a year also when the biting habit was common, poisoned honey was known."

Silly Weather Beliefs

Several common superstitions concerning the weather have been dispelled by the weather bureau at Washington, says Popular Mechanics Magazine. In both Europe and America there is an old belief that a severe storm—the so-called "equinoctial gale"—is due about the date of either equinox, that is, March 21 or September 22. According to scientists there is no maximum of storm frequency either in this country or abroad close to the date of either equinox. Of course, in the long run storms do occur about these dates, just as they occur at all other times in the year, but there is no reason why they should be especially frequent at the equinoxes. Commenting on the moon's influence on the weather, the bureau says: "Modern science is unable to find any evidence that the moon affects the weather to an appreciable extent, and is unable to conceive of any reason why it should." The belief in "dry" and "wet" moons, indicated by the position of the lunar crescent in the evening sky, and a host of other notions are denounced as merely idle superstitions.

One on the Manager

The manager of the store was approached by a clerk. "There is a woman down here with a complaint," she began.

He raised his hand. "I haven't time to talk to her," he returned. "Make it right for her. You can take care of her, I know."

A few minutes later he wandered down to that part of the store. The clerk was talking to a beautiful young girl. The manager stared and then walked up to them. "I find I have time for the complaint," he began.

Imagine his horror when the clerk motioned to a waiting woman, who was forty and fat. The beautiful young girl was another customer.—Exchange.

Flustrated Bridegroom

A minister, as an illustration of extreme embarrassment, tells of a strapping big fellow who brought his demure young bride to the church parsonage for matrimonial purposes.

"According to my usual custom," says the minister, "I turned to the bridegroom at a certain point in the ceremony and said: 'John, this is your lawfully wedded wife.'

"In the excitement of the occasion John turned awkwardly in the direction of his newly acquired lifemate and stammered: 'I'm pleased to meet you.'"

Explaining the Mystery

Speaking of children, this from the Wichita Eagle is not so bad: "Harry, how is it that your shoes are always shined each morning?" asked a teacher at Alexander Hamilton intermediate school last week. "It ain't my fault, teacher. Pa, he gets up to build the fire each morning and shines one of my shoes. Then I have to shine the other one to keep from looking funny."

Catch 'Em Young —or Old

By H. LOUIS RAYBOLD

(Copyright.)

"I DISAGREE with your catch-'em-young theory," said George Coleman firmly. "You maintain, Henry, that if you marry a little flapper you can mold her to your ways, while I believe that a woman who is already settled in ways you admire is preferable."

"Humph!" commented Henry Fowler. "Two confirmed bachelors like ourselves discussing marriage! But I'll wager my Super-eight sedan against your new Sussex roadster that when you fall, it'll be for some young thing that doesn't know enough to go in when it rains, unless her complexion begins to run—and that I shall do likewise!"

"Done!" shouted George so vehemently that Henry jumped.

"All right, old man," soothed his friend. "Don't get excited. Dining with the Enderbys this evening? Thought likely. Nice people." And he relapsed into his newspaper.

Henry did not know that friend George's vehemence arose from the fact that he feared the very contingency predicted.

Helen Enderby had a very flapperish daughter as pretty as two pictures. Gabriella her name was, and that was only one of many things about her which George did not fancy.

Yet she fascinated George in spite of himself.

"A nice wife for somebody," he liked to say to himself, "when she grows up."

He would be too old then—most as old as Henry Fowler was now, who was old enough to be the girl's father. Yet Henry, at that, he reflected, often took Gabriella out and thereby roused in George a demon of jealousy.

He was to dine this evening at the Enderbys'—as usual—a habit started at the time of the death of John Enderby, when he had stepped in as an old friend of the family to shift some of the suddenly imposed burden of care from Helen's fragile shoulders. A wonderful woman, Helen! As unlike Gabriella as an Easter lily is unlike a giddy poppy.

After supper when Gabriella had departed somewhere or other with somebody or other, Helen confided certain worries to him.

"I am troubled, George," she said, "about my little girl. I am afraid she is getting too fond of Henry Fowler. I don't know a finer man, but, George, he's my age! Gabriella should marry a young chap. Even you are nearer her age than Henry!"

"Thanks, dear lady!" And George arose and bowed. "But what can we do?"

"Couldn't you go around a little more with her yourself?" Helen put the question tentatively. "Cut in on Henry. If she really loves him, and he is really serious, that will show it up. If not, she will get over what is probably mere infatuation."

This was the moment for George to play safe and wash his hands of the dangerous Gabriella. But did he? Quite the contrary. He stood up and squared his shoulders. "My dear Helen, I stand always ready to do you any service in my power," he assured her gallantly.

A very thorough person was George when once committed to a line of action, and he straightaway began a complete absorption of Gabriella's time.

Came a day when the four of them had motored to Claremont in Helen's car and were returning slowly down the drive. Gabriella, who was driving, was dividing her attention between the wheel and the panoramic river lights. Suddenly down a steep grade at the left plunged an uncontrolled and empty car.

Instinctively Gabriella pressed the accelerator. As a result, the car, instead of smashing into the machine sideways, crashed by and over the bank, but as it did so the rear fender engaged for a second the very end of the fender of the Enderby machine, throwing it violently across the road where, hitting the curb, it toppled over.

Fifteen minutes later Gabriella awoke to consciousness and became aware of a crowd of people, among whom she singled out Henry and her mother. Where was George? Killed, of course. She stirred a trifle.

"Darling Gabriella," came a voice in her ear, and she found she was lying in a man's arms. George was alive!

But it was shock more than actual hurt which had affected her, and in a few days she was herself again. George, permitted to see her after a week of suspense, wondered to see how rosy were her cheeks—how naturally rosy!

Just after he had slipped a platinum, jewel-studded band on her slender finger, "How did you discover you loved me?" Gabriella asked him.

"So long ago I can't recall!" declared George fatuously and not altogether truthfully.

But later he hunted up Henry at the club as a man who is in duty bound to pay his debts.

"You win," he said. "I'm engaged to the sweetest little flapper living! You laughed at my 'catch-'em-old' theory, and you were right. 'Catch-'em-young' is infinitely better, and—"

"Hold on," said Henry, and shook his head. "Keep your old car. 'Catch-'em-young' may be all right for you. Personally, however, I believe in wedding a woman who is already settled in the ways you admire. Congratulate me, old man. Gabriella's mother and I were married yesterday!"

Indians Claim Big Area in Tennessee

Start Suit in Court for Five Million Acres.

Charlotte, N. C.—Claims to recover 5,000,000 acres of land embracing much of east Tennessee, and including the city of Chattanooga, has been filed by John M. Taylor, an attorney, who is a fullblood Cherokee Indian, before the Department of the Interior, for the Eastern Immigrant Cherokees of Oklahoma and North Carolina, basing his claims upon ancient treaties and the code of North Carolina, relating to the Indians, several thousand of whom are still domiciled in this state. The suits have been filed at Murphy, in Cherokee county, and in Tennessee.

In support of his claim the attorney has filed certified copies of various treaties negotiated with the Indians by the state of North Carolina. The claims are filed in behalf of Taylor and over 400 other "redskins." He has caused to be put into the record in both places where he filed claims a collection of papers on the contents of which he expects to establish his case. His admission to the bar as an attorney has also been filed.

Taylor, according to Representative Weaver of the Tenth North Carolina district, at one time resided in Cherokee county, later removing to Oklahoma, in which state the main portion of the Cherokee nation resides. Weaver asserts that Taylor has been in Washington on numerous occasions as a representative of the Cherokee Indians. The attorney insists that the Indians are entitled to interest amounting to $100,000,000.

Copy of Code Filed.

Among the voluminous papers filed in the case is a certified copy of an act from the code of North Carolina of 1783, in which it is recited that "The Cherokee Indians shall have and enjoy that tract of land bounded as follows, to-wit: Beginning on the Tennessee river, where the southern boundary of the state intersects the same nearest the Chickamauga towns; thence up the middle of the Tennessee and Holston rivers to the middle of the French Broad river; thence up the French Broad river (which lines are not to include any islands in said river) to the mouth of the Big Pigeon river; thence up the same to the head thereof; thence along the dividing ridge between the waters of the Pigeon and Tuckashah rivers to the southern boundary of the state, and the lands contained in the aforesaid bounds shall be reserved to the said Cherokee Indians and their nation forever, anything hereinbefore to the contrary notwithstanding."

Includes Chattanooga.

The "Chickamauga towns" referred to in the act were in the vicinity of what is now the city of Chattanooga, and the territory involved will include practically all of the area of that Tennessee metropolis. Taylor also sets up claim to 640 acres which he asserts lie in the Moccasin bend.

The attorney states further that under the act passed by the recent congress, Indians are allowed to bring suit in the Court of Claims for the recovery of Indian reserves. It is understood that Taylor, under this provision, intends bringing suit for the entire reservation as set out in the North Carolina act, which granted the 5,000,000-acre tract to the Cherokees, the establishment of whose claims thereto were fixed by later treaties.

The state of Tennessee was at one time a part of North Carolina, and Taylor will attempt to show that the original act, granting territory embraced in the bounds of that commonwealth, was never repealed. There is also on record a memorandum to this effect:

"Say to our full-blood people that they must raise plenty of expense money."

Lost Golf Ball Found by Dying Rattlesnake

Augusta, Ga.—Local golfers have killed wild birds and pigeons with their mighty drives, and it is even said that innocent bystanders have been knocked silly by ill-guided balls, but it remained for Morton Jones, automobile dealer, to set a new record in this line. Playing golf with Judge J. C. C. Black, Hugh H. Saxon and Milledge Lockhart, Mr. Jones sliced his ball on the twelfth tee and when the elusive pill was found behind a shallow declivity it was lying close beside a diamond-back rattlesnake which was in the throes of death. The snake measured three feet and had two rattles.

ROYALTY IS SPARED BY LONDON CROOKS

Convention Is Strictly Observed by Underworld.

New York.—Officials in America who are charged with the protection of visiting royalty—for instance, the prince of Wales—would be saved considerable worry if American thieves would accept a convention observed by their colleagues in the United Kingdom. British thieves will not rob any member of the royal family.

There are laws of the underworld that exist chiefly in the minds of outsiders, such as "honor among thieves," but the exemption of royalty seems to have a somewhat firmer basis, if the police records show anything at all. Robbing royalty isn't considered "clubby."

London's crookdom believes there's a divinity that hedges round a king, even if New York's thieves are strong for democracy in such professional matters.

It is said that in things of this sort the personal popularity of a royal individual is a factor. Yet even so popular a figure as the prince of Wales, who became King Edward, was robbed of a gold watch in 1865. It was at the Cherisey steeplechase. And he never got the watch back. That, however, is one of the few exceptions, which include also the theft of a dressing case from the duke of Edinburgh 50 years or so ago.

Little affairs of that kind are regarded as showing a want to tact. A king's messenger would be fair game, but not a king himself.

This attitude came to light in a practical form only a few months ago, after want of tact had been displayed by some one undetermined. The victim was Prince George. The king's youngest son left some trinkets in his motor in the West End, and they disappeared. There were a set of diamond cuff links that Queen Alexandria had given him, a stickpin and some other links, one set bearing a "G" in diamonds and another of different fashion.

The loss became known to the public and in a day or two a reticent man visited a police official and left a little package. Everything was there.

EX-KAISER IS PEEVED AT HIS ELDEST SON

Activity in Political Circles Annoys Father.

Doorn.—Life at the Chateau of Doorn has become, particularly during the last few months, extremely animated.

Every day, almost, sees the arrival of fine automobiles bringing princes, ex-ambassadors, former ministers and generals who had served under the old monarchial regime in Germany.

Some of the visitors leave after a day or two, but others prolong their stay, residing for the time being in expensive "pensions," where they make an ostentatious display of their war decorations, and pay almost daily visits in full dress uniform to the ex-kaiser.

The former emperor appears to be doing everything possible to entertain and attract to himself the sympathies of all German monarchist and military circles. His consort, Hermine, who burns with the desire and hope of one day becoming empress of Germany, seconds her husband in these efforts in the most active manner, and with all the grace at her command, by holding grand receptions and entertainments.

All these activities have for their principal object, according to what is related in the best-informed quarters, to counteract similar ambitious projects entertained by the former crown prince. It is even said that the rivalry between father and son has developed recently into a state of latent warfare, pursued mercilessly on both sides.

The activity displayed since his return to Germany by the former crown prince in political circles, especially among the nationalists and monarchists and the younger generation of militarists, rumors of which reach the ex-kaiser from Berlin, serve to render the latter furious against his son. The prince, on his side, is said to show but little of either respect or admiration for the personages of the old regime and its time-honored traditions.

The ex-crown prince would seem to be desirous of breaking definitely with the ideas and personages of the past, and even to be willing to find himself at the head of a regime purely democratic, provided that it was at the same time nationalist. The former emperor, on the contrary, clings desperately to the ideas and persons of the past, and shows himself a bitter and unchangeable enemy to all democratic sentiments.

Breaks Sidewalk

Leavenworth, Kan.—Dale Dunkin, a youth weighing 320 pounds, plunged eight feet into the basement of a store when the stone flagging over which he was walking broke in the center. The slab of stone was eight feet long and three inches thick. Dunkin was injured severely.

New York Court Puts Curb on Mother-in-Law

White Plains, N. Y.—Supreme Court Justice A. H. F. Seeger here signed an order restraining Mrs. Ida K. Greenwood of Mount Vernon from interfering with her son-in-law, Ferdinand Hoffman, in his attempts to see his three children and also restraining her from crossing the street in front of her home in Mount Vernon to the homes of Hoffman's sisters and from talking to them or to neighbors of either regarding the marital affairs of the Hoffmans.

Hoffman in his complaint petition said that his mother-in-law did everything she could to keep the children from his sight. "She is spluttering her mother-in-law spite in Mount Vernon," he said. Hoffman and his wife were recently estranged, but have not been legally separated. Mrs. Hoffman lives with her mother and the three Hoffman children, John, fourteen; Edward, eight, and Anna, six years old. Hoffman recently applied for a writ of habeas corpus to permit him to get the custody of the children, and Justice Seeger's order made provision for the father to see his children on certain days of the week.

HELPED HER IN EVERY WAY

So Writes Mrs. Trombley of Sharon, Vt., Concerning Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Sharon, Vermont. — "I was weak and run-down, had a tired feeling and bearing-down pains. I saw an advertisement in the newspaper about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and began taking it. It has stopped these bearing-down pains and other bad feelings, and has helped me in every way. I have so much faith in the Vegetable Compound that I keep it on hand all of the time and recommend it whenever I have the opportunity."—Mrs. LEWIS TROMBLEY, Sharon, Vermont.

Glad to Help Others

"I had pains in my back and sides for many months, and my work would have to be left undone at those times. My sister told me what good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound was doing her, so I tried it, and from the third bottle I was well and every one thought I looked better. I am glad to help others regain their health, and you may use my testimonial."—MABEL HARTMANN, 1824 Greene Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

This Rabbit a Nuisance

The "snowshoe" rabbit is becoming unpopular among foreigners of northern Minnesota. This picturesquely named animal is very abundant this year, and is eating the tips and needles off young pine trees planted on denuded forest land. It also eats the foliage off young spruce, aspen and maples, and if the trees are more than three feet high, gnaws away their bark near the base. In one plantation 79 per cent of the trees were damaged, 43 per cent probably fatally.

Skin so sore could not touch water to it

Resinol relieves it within few hours

Washington, D. C., Aug. 25:—"I am so grateful to you for your splendid products and for what they have accomplished for me that I feel I must give you the details.

In attempting to improve the appearance of my chin, I used a soap which had been recommended for that purpose but which proved to be too harsh for when I washed off the lather, the skin came with it. I applied cold cream, but the damage was too severe to yield to so mild an agent. My husband consulted our neighborhood druggist and asked if it would not be advisable to call in our family doctor. The druggist said: "You do not need a doctor in this case. Get a jar of Resinol Ointment and a cake of Resinol Soap and have your wife use them according to directions—they will beat everything else a hundred ways." So my husband bought the Resinol products and hopefully brought them home.

My skin was so tender and sore that I could not touch water to it, so I cleansed it gently first with pure olive oil and then applied the Resinol. I used a soft handkerchief that night for protection. In the morning, I bathed it gently with warm water and Resinol Soap, rinsing off with tepid water, and I could hardly believe that such a miracle of healing could occur during one night. The raw surface had filmed over and now looked only like a bad case of sunburn. I kept my face anointed with Resinol all that day and by night the improvement was so great that I was able to go out.

This experience is now only a memory for my face is softer, fairer and smoother than ever. A jar of Resinol is my best pal in the future and I will never be without it." (Signed) Mrs. C. P. Tapley, 1028 8th St., N. W.

WHO'S WHO in the WORLD

MacMillan Back Again From the Arctic

Capt. Donald B. MacMillan is back from another of his Arctic trips—he makes less ado about them than some of us make over a summer vacation. This time he and his party of six were gone fifteen months. They reached a point within 11 degrees of the North pole, where their schooner, the Bowdoin, was frozen in for 320 days. This point was off the coast of North Greenland, within 20 miles of the spot where 17 members of the Greely expedition starved to death in 1884 and the survivors were in their last gasp when rescued by United States naval vessels. Note the contrast. No one was ill. Everyone was comfortable. They explored and got scientific data. They got all the news by radio, including Christmas greetings and the latest jazz.

Incidentally, they discovered enormous soft coal deposits in Ellesmere Land, near Eureka sound; in places the seams were 25 feet thick. But it will not help us this winter, for the deposits are 800 miles beyond present transportation systems, dog sledge included.

MacMillan took into his employ an Eskimo who said he was with Dr. Cook in 1909. Cook, said the Eskimo, got to Axel Heiberg Land, which is within 500 miles of the pole. Cook and his two Eskimos slept two nights in a snow hut 12 miles out on the Polar sea and it was there he raised the American flag, declaring he had reached the pole.

Another Unsolved Gem Theft Mystery?

Is the Cosden-Mountbatten robbery to be added to the long list of mysterious gem thefts that have never been solved? Anyway, it has started out well as a mystery. Mr. and Mrs. Joshua S. Cosden and their house guests, Lord and Lady Louis Mountbatten and the Hon. Mrs. Richard Brinsley Norton, had attended a dancing party on Long Island, given for the prince of Wales. The Cosden home is at Sands Point, L. I. It was 5 o'clock in the morning when they retired, after a little breakfast they cooked for themselves in the kitchen of the Cosden home. At 8:30 o'clock Mr. Cosden's valet missed a pearl shirt stud valued at $8,000. But that loss was trifling compared with others discovered soon after. From the dressing table of Mrs. Cosden (portrait herewith) had vanished jewelry worth $100,000. From Lady Mountbatten's table were gone gems worth $42,000. Mrs. Norton was the only member of the household fortunate enough to escape despoliation. Lord Mountbatten's wallet, containing 2,000 pounds in English banknotes, and lying on his wife's dressing table, had not been disturbed. A watchman had been on duty downstairs up to 7 a. m.

Mr. Cosden is a wealthy oil man, whose racing stable is prominent in the East.

James A. Drain Heads American Legion

James A. Drain of Washington, D. C. (portrait herewith), is the new national commander of the American Legion, succeeding John R. Quinn. Commander Drain is fifty-four years old. He was born in Warren county, Illinois. He is a lawyer. He will move to Indianapolis shortly, because it is there that the Legion offices are located. Drain is a picturesque figure. His right hand is missing. It was shot off in an accident while he was hunting. Despite the handicap, Jim Drain went overseas with the Yanks. He was the only man in the great army who had but one hand. He has been in the National Guard. He's been a buck private, and he's a brigadier general. He served in the Spanish-American war, and he was with the tank corps six years ago in France.

"What work is ahead of me?" he asked. "My whole mission can be told in three words: 'For God and Country,' the first words of the preamble of the legion's constitution. For God and country without partisanship in politics, without intolerance in religion, making, as we always have, the care of the disabled comrade our first concern. Second only to rehabilitation is our obligation to care for the orphaned children of our fallen comrades. We are going to make one of our big labors the getting out of the voters on election day."

American Back of Gen. Chang Tso Lin

Not even a Philadelphia lawyer could unravel the Chinese civil war mixup now going on in continuous performance. However, here are some of the leading participants: Gen. Chang Tso Lin (portrait herewith), Manchurian war lord, who controls Manchuria and would capture Peking. Gen. Wu Pei Fu, Chihli war lord and backer of the present Peking government, headed by President Tsao Kun. General Wu is striving to bring all of China under control of Peking. Dr. Sun Yat Sen, president of the South China republic, with his capital at Canton.

An interesting thing is the fact that an American, Edward Carleton Baker, former assistant chief of the far eastern division of the State department, is the man behind Gen. Chang Tso Lin's great military movement against Peking. He is a native of Alameda, Cal., and three years ago was American consul general at Mukden. Ever since Chang's defeat by Wu Pei Fu in 1922, Baker has been the Manchurian general's chief of military preparations, with carte blanche to develop them for the day of reckoning with Peking. Authorities assert that Chang today is well nigh invincible through the thoroughgoing "organization for victory" which has been carried on by the young Californian.

LEGION IS PRAISED

GOV. CHANNING H. COX, of Massachusetts, speaking at the state convention of the American Legion held at Pittsfield recently, praised the Legion as patriots at a time when patriots are needed. He said:

"At times when it has seemed that the people had forgotten their obligations to their state and nation, the Legion has always called their attention to them. It was the Legion that came to the rescue last Patriots' day in Boston. It rallied a parade through the streets of the state capital and averted the effects of the propaganda which was being circulated at that time. On Armistice day, too, with the huge demonstration in Boston the Legion showed its strong right arm. It means much to have you men who know your duty and do it, of conserving the patriotism of the people of this country, and your leadership is indeed appropriate and timely."

LEGIONNAIRES AID VETERANS OF 1864

The things that will or will not make good news copy vary greatly with the passing of the years. Announcement that the Union Veteran Legion would hold its annual national convention some time in September in Altoona, Pa., made only a bare inch of newspaper copy. "And who, and what, is the Union Veteran Legion anyway, that they should be given even an inch of space in the newspapers? I don't recollect ever having heard of them," you say. Which is rather surprising, for at one time in the nation's history the Union Veteran Legion was making column after column of breathless copy. Sherman's march to the sea made good copy in those days—first-page stuff that was avidly read by a grateful populace. But that was more than a half century ago and news values change and the makers of much of that copy, the Union Veteran Legion, are dropped from the first page entirely and get only a skimpy inch on an inside sheet.

However, there are those in these United States who read the newspapers rather carefully, among them the American Legion, and the bare inch of copy concerning the proposed national convention of the Union Veteran Legion was sufficient to catch the eye of American Legionnaires of Altoona and inferest them to such an extent that a committee was immediately appointed to aid the Union Veteran Legion in preparing for their national convention. In appointing the committee to help the Union Veteran Legion with their convention, the American Legion was motivated by the following facts:

To be a member of the Union Veteran Legion one must have been a volunteer and have served not less than three years in the Civil war. Most of the surviving members of the organization are very old, and the toil, harassments and uncertainty of preparing for a national convention would be a severe strain upon the strength of the veterans of '64. So the American Legion decided to lift the load from the shoulders of their venerable comrades to enable them to be free to enjoy themselves without the worries and trials incident to the administration of a convention.

Takes Rap at Wealthy Women Who Seek Honor

If bachelors of the Legion could only figure out some way to induce rich American heiresses to heed the words of Gov. Pat M. Neff of Texas when he addressed the sixth annual convention of the Texas department of the Legion, they would, as the saying goes, "be sitting pretty." Governor Neff sympathized as follows: "I have no patience and very little respect for those wealthy American daughters who are willing to trade their wealth to an empty European title. If I were an American girl I would father be the wife of an American Legionnaire, though of humble means, than the wife of a silly duke with no other claim than that he is the son of some queen and lives among the pictures of a forgotten past."

Notables Present at Ball Given by Legion

When the Legion gives a party it generally has the company of most folks worth while, and such proved to be the case at the grand ball given at the state convention of the Legion at Pittsfield, Mass., recently, which the following personages attended: Gov. Channing H. Cox, Mayor James M. Curley of Boston, Senator David I. Walsh, Maj. Gen. Clarence R. Edwards, Commander Ham, G. A. R.; Mrs. Elizabeth O'Brien, department president, American Legion Auxiliary; Congressman Allen T. Treadway, Congressman Louis A. Frothingham, Rear Admiral de Steibuer, U. S. N.; Commissioner Richard Flynn, and some five hundred more of our leading citizens.

JAMES DRAIN, NEW LEGION COMMANDER

James A. Drain, who was elected national commander of the American Legion at its sixth annual convention at St. Paul, Minn., has had a long and active career in the National Guard and in the army, and has taken a leading part in the program of the Legion.

Commander Drain has decided to move to Indianapolis and will administer the affairs of the Legion from national headquarters there, as did Past Commander John R. Quinn. He expects, it is understood, to devote most of his time and energy to building up the internal organization of the Legion. He declared that the Legion will adhere strictly to its policy of no political entanglements.

Mr. Drain served for 20 months as commander of the department of the District of Columbia. He has been active in rehabilitation work. He served as chairman of the Fourth district rehabilitation committee of the Legion, which is, because of its location at the national capital, extremely important. The new commander has been a member of the national executive committee of the Legion and also of the board of directors of the American Legion Weekly.

James A. Drain.

Rising from private to brigadier general, the new Legion head began his military career in the National Guard of the state of Washington. He was a captain in the Spanish-American war. In the World war he was ordnance officer with the tank corps, later serving as a member of the Anglo-American tank commission.

Warren county, Illinois, is the birthplace of Commander Drain. He was born on September 30, 1870. He has practiced law in Nebraska, Washington state, New York city and in the national capital. He is chairman of the executive committee of the National Guard association and president of the National Rifle association of America.

American Legion Helps Widow in Need of Aid

A widow of Ohio who had two sons in the service, one having died in service and one since as a result of service, held two compensation checks received by her son but not indorsed by him before his death. The burial expenses for her son amounted to more than $500. She needed cash. Her son had told her before his death that if, after his death, she needed advice and assistance to go to the American Legion. She did. Through the agency of the American Legion the Probate court was prevailed upon to execute administration papers at a cost of $20 less than in usual cases and the much-needed checks were redrawn in favor of the widow. Claim was made by the service department of the Legion for death compensation for the widow and in less than three weeks the claim was allowed by the bureau and the widow granted a death compensation of $25 a month until 1937.

Tyndall Appreciative

In a bulletin read before the officers and men of the Thirty-eighth division and One Hundred and Fiftieth field artillery of Indiana, Maj. Gen. Robert H. Tyndall, national treasurer of the American Legion, expressed his appreciation to the men of his command for their efficient and enthusiastic cooperation in the recent field maneuvers held at Camp Knox, Ky. The "Cyclone" division took an important part in the maneuvers which were undertaken in preparation for National Defense day, September 12.

Donated Silver Cup

Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt of New York occupied a box at the water sports carnival and "gymkhana" given at Bar Harbor, Maine, under the auspices of the American Legion. Mrs. Vanderbilt donated a silver cup for the chariot race, the concluding feature.

High School Seniors Are Watching Campaign

(By The Observer.)

The senior class of B. H. S. is taking much interest in the coming of the presidential election this year. We have appointed campaign managers for each party, who keep account of the different states and their probable votes. Although hardly any are of voting age, still we are not without opinions as to who should be our coming Presidents. We are interested in watching the doubtful States in the South and West and have many discussions outside of classes as well as in class on the unsettled States. Great will be the consternation of the Republican standbys if LaFollette happens to win.

Next Saturday afternoon at 2:30 our football team will meet the Altoona Catholic High School. This is the first big game for our boys and they are working hard to be ready for it. Altoona C. H. S. is somewhat of a mystery to us, so we do not know what to expect of them.

At last Saturday's game we counted 67—more or less—small boys, none of whom had come through the gate. Takes us back a few years.

John Emel is hoping that somebody will put up a sign offering a new pair of socks for every touch down. He has worn his to a point where he can put them on from either end. John claims he runs so fast that his socks get hot and burn off.

Enough medical supplies, bandages, gauze, tape, iodine, etc. for the season have been donated to the football team by Forrest Tanner. This unexpected and wholly useful gift certainly is appreciated by the boys.

The B. H. S. A. A. wishes to thank those who have officiated at the past two games. They are John Bower, Carl Dietrick and Toby Lyons.

Mrs. Daisy Henderson had the misfortune, Saturday morning, of falling down stairs, which resulted in a broken ankle. The school joins in wishing her a speedy recovery.

Anniversary of "Y."

The Bellefonte Y. M. A. C. will be 55 years old on Sunday, Oct. 19. By way of celebration, it will hold open house all week. On Monday, two indoor base-ball games will be played also opening of the bowling league. Tuesday: Hike and weiner rosst for younger boys; 8 p. m. business men's volley ball. Wednesday: Two indoor base-ball games, juniors gym frolic, at 4:30; older boys' overnight trip to Camp Kanesatake. Thursday: Girls indoor baseball; girls gym class. In the evening, at 7:30, a women's gym class will be started. It will also be ladies night in the bowling alleys. Friday: Semi-finals in the indoor base-ball league. Saturday, juniors gym class. Final game of indoor baseball. A bowling match will be held in the evening between the Renovo and Bellefonte "Y." All boys contemplating taking any of the trips should sign up this week. The over-night trip will be in charge of Secretary Aplin, while the junior boys' hikes will be directed by the physical director. Boys not members of the "Y" may sign up for the trips.

Conference of Women's Clubs.

The Women's club of Bellefonte will be host to all of the women's organizations in Centre County at the annual conference on Saturday, Oct. 18, at the High School building. Dr. A. E. Martin, dean of the history department of the Penna. State College, has agreed to speak to the assemblage in the afternoon. His subject will be "Intricacies in Our Relations with Japan." There is no doubt that Dr. Martin is the master of his subject, and his address will be both instructive and interesting. Women who will attend both sessions are requested to bring box lunches. Inasmuch as the Bellefonte club is to be the host of the occasion, the officers request that as many local members as can possibly attend, do so. It will be an exceptional opportunity to meet members of other clubs and form new friendships, as well as exchange ideas on current events. The public is cordially invited.

D. B. Allison Coming.

Keep in mind the next public lecture, under auspices of the local branch of the International Bible Students' Association, will be held in the Scenic Theatre, on Sunday, November 2nd, at 3 P. M. The speaker will be D. B. Allison, of Altoona, and his subject, "Civilization Doomed, but Millions Now Living Will Never Die." This message will be given in every country in the civilized world on Nov. 2nd.

FOOT-BALL NOTES

Academy Swamps Susquehanna; B. H. S. Defeats Millheim.

Last Friday afternoon the Bellefonte Academy swamped the Susquehanna University Reserve team, 113 to 0. Several new methods of attack were tried out by the Academy, one new feature being the use of the forward pass to a man behind the goal instead of the usual kick after a touchdown has been made.

The High School won their second game of the season by defeating Millheim Saturday morning on Hughes field, 46 to 13. Cable was the star for the Penn's Valley gridders, scoring both of their touchdowns. Emil and McCullough divided the back field honors of Bellefonte.
